Summertown Montessori Nursery

Key Person & Attachment Theory

Background

The Key Person approach has been adopted to bring the building of a secure adult child relationship into the nursery setting.

The Key Person approach is based on Attachment Theory, describing the bond between an infant and an adult who is special to the child and central to a child's well-being. There are different phases of attachment with the last phase spanning the nursery years. At this stage, the child has developed 'emotional security' whereby they can have periods of separation from their primary adult figure (parent/carer). This is the point where another attachment figure, i.e., the Key Person (KP), can play a role.

Implementation

The KP is responsible for small groups of children and a good KP will demonstrate:

- Availability
- Sensitivity
- Warmth

The KP will manage the settling-in process, as described on our online Parents Page

Building an Attachment

The KP provides the secure base from which the child can explore the nursery setting, other children and other adults. The KP attends to the child's physical needs (nappy changing, feeding, nap time) - physical contact reassures the child that they are liked and welcomed - and provides emotional reassurance and support.

Relationships with Parents/Carers

A good KP respects boundaries, treating with utmost confidence any sensitive information in line with GDPR, while reassuring the parent/carer that that their close attachment to the child will not replace attachments at home. Attachment is not a fixed quantity in children's lives.

Nursery Organization

The nursery addresses disruption in children's attachments (staff job changes, staff sickness, etc.) by having a back-up person available. The nursery manager will:

- 1. Support the importance of the KP role within the setting
- 2. Ensure appropriate training for al Key Persons
- 3. Support KP's in addressing emotional and intellectual challenges
- 4. Provide time in staff meetings to discuss concerns and to share experiences
